A COUPLE OF OLD LADIES.

MRS. VAN NOSTRAND IS 100 AND MRS. WALLACK IS 100.

Both is Good Health and Sprightly-Mrs. Van Nestrand Was the Life of the Company at Hor Recent Birthday Celebration. A week ago yesterday Mrs. Sarah P. Van Mostrand of Millstone, N. J., celebrated her 102d birthday, and a big number of friends and relatives gathered at her house to do her bence. Everybody had a good time, and they say that the remarkable old lady was the life of the gathering. She rehearsed the jokes of the last century in a way that gave an atmosphere of novelty to the fun, and she esverted with the young cavaliers of 70 or thereabouts by whom she was surrounded in a way to arouse the envy of younger dames who chanced to be present. Mrs. Van Restrand was born in the quaint old building now known as the Franklin Hotel, about a half mile from her present dwelling, and all mrengh her long life she has not lived at a greater distance than three miles from her birthplace. Her memory is wonderfully fresh concerning the events of national interest in the first quarter of this century, and one of her favorite stories tells how she used to play around the ruins of Milistone Court House. which was burned by the British during the Berelutionary war. As to what has happened during the last thirty years she is a little forgetful, but that is a common failing with people who live to anywhere near her years. Her husband died at the age of 86, and other members of her immediate family appear to be died with long sodurance against the assame of time. For instance, there is her son Jeon, who climbed briskly into a carriage wage a sur reporter sat yeaterday to tell how mass.

"It is seen my seventy-seventh birthday." he remarked when asked how old he was.

Be didn't look it or act it. He spoke of his mether as a pretty smart old lady for her years. There were at the celebration three sons and two daughters, thirteen grandchildren, and a secret of great-grandchildren. A few months as one of her sons died, and it was the first death in her tamily that had occurred in 75 years. The Sun reporter wanted to secure a piture of the old lady to print in this paper, but her daughter, aged 79, did not dare to lend an excellent photograph takes when Mrs. Van Nostrand was a giddy years thing of 75. The picture showed that she had changed not at all during the last irenty-seven years. While the matter was wader discussion the wonderful old lady arose from her chair and walked steadily across the mon to gaze upon the counterfeit presentment of herself in her youthful years. She seemed it herself in her youthful years. She seemed is being hy picased at the attention paid to be highly picased at the attention paid to lose, and if she could have had her way the picture would have been lent to the caller and may oduced here; but the young lady, her daughter, conduct space it, even over night. Peter U. Hiller, the village hackman, said that he became acquainted with Mrs. Van Nostrand fly years are.

"The was an old lady then," he said, and I can't help feeling proud that I took her on her had thouse.

"I light her too gagain pretty soon, but just now she says she's getting too old to go out driving with a young chan like me. She pretends to be lealous of the young girls in the village, and that leads to lote of fun when there is a party at her house.

"The Mr. Miller's statement was true was demonstrated to my of them at the pairty a week are. Tou've got to go driving with me once m dildren.

After a union of forty-eight years Mr. Walkee died, and Mrs. Wallace resided with her sa, for whom she kept house. She performed all kinds of domestic labor until after she was Bysars old. Mrs. Wallace is wonderfully well preserved mentally and physically. She converse intelliguatty, and her excellent memory makes her an authority on all events of the past in her neighborhood. Her sight is religiately good, enabling her to read with facility, and she can distinguish colors and Precorning terroops at a considerable distance. mellity and she can distinguish colors and recognize persons at a considerable distance. She sews, kniks, and mends for the family of her son-in-in-w, and not infrequently goes into the kitchen to bake a cake or superintend the cooking of some favored dish. She eats leartly, sicely regularly, and when the weather a lair, soes out daily for air and exercise. All extward any pearances indicate that her life will be considerably prolonged.
